PURPOSE OF THE CONFERENCE

The University of Kentucky invites you to attend the annual interprofessional conference for community and academic medical center educators and researchers. This conference will advance healthcare by strengthening university-community partnerships in education and research. It will provide important information and offer a forum for dialogue between campus and community-based health professionals in order to enhance community-campus engagement. The conference will address issues pertinent to the education of health professions students in the community as well as partnerships for translational research.

CONFERENCE OBJECTIVES

The conference objectives are:

- to strengthen educational and research partnerships among programs and between campus and community faculty
- to address opportunities and challenges of educational and research collaborations in community settings
- to develop new skills in areas of interest related to improving instruction in community sites
- to develop new skills in areas of interest related to advancing research in community practices
- to develop and strengthen research partnerships aimed at improving health and healthcare in the Commonwealth and beyond
- to share new information about Kentucky's Practice-Based Research Networks (PBRNs) and discuss ideas for new collaborations
- to understand the value of PBRNs in Comparative Effectiveness Research (CER)

TARGET AUDIENCE

The target audience for this conference includes health professionals involved in education and/or collaborative research between campus and community faculty members, as well as the administrators and staff who support them.

PROGRAM SITE

The conference will take place at the Griffin Gate Marriott Resort & Spa, Lexington, KY. Detailed directions to the hotel are available at the conference registration website.
